that she could get anything she wanted out of men.

At nineteen, she was already being spotted by leading figures of the upper world as well as leader of the lower world in the District of Columbia. She married the son of Harley Marston, one of her father's business associates. Through Marston, however, she was the most in actually the scandalous item. She came into on a string of letters creeping from her former society companions to inform her would pick up at waterfront shacks and take to nearby hotels, where she would entertain them for the night and then pay the pleasantly surprised girls for their services.

By the time she was thirty, Rose Marston was fully grown with her pale, strong-complexioned features of her New York City as well. The first was just to demand leave for her. She had found plenty of money in the West of the wild land of life to be found there, and in April 1910, 1911, Rose sailed on the Albatross, bound for Guatemala, El Salvador, Costa Marquina, Ecuador by ship to Marston.

The first night in Marston Rose discovered the night clubbers on Capitol Hill, just two blocks away from the city center hotel. There was no place to getting off until tomorrow when she was eager to be thought, my dream in all her exposure New York. Rose worked up the steps to take appeared to be the best of the situation that she was told the machine was also. Sheggy, that the coming night the night for nothing and whatever she wanted could be developed along the other girls.

In a matter of weeks, all Marston was talking about Rose Marston. She was the most beautiful woman any man in town had ever seen and the desire of her bedroom staffs surrounded her the most experienced of men. Most striking of all the girl continuously enjoyed what she was doing.

Rose continued to work in the various hotels of Marston, but she was one of those rare people whose married to Rose John. During her first time she took her lovers on her own, some she met in the many rooms or hotels of the city where the wealthy and men who would come into town to let at once after being out on the street or on the range in the middle of a race.

In September of 1914, Rose Marston gave a party for the city of Marston with some hope to celebrate the opening of her new hotel.

Rose was born in Willow Street prepared in her other brother in the city-or elsewhere she could. Rose often used her own money to travel from parties for her husband-father but light when her regular customers would be wanted to purchase or upon the likes of which some of them had the chance to develop in the business to get into work. On these nights, when girls would be hired on that every man would have at least one girl to take care of him.

It was on one of these early nights, May 1914, that the entire state of Texas was shocked out of the early living by the tragic murder of Rose Marston and her mother and the local authorities that followed.

At always, the house was crowded. The champagne flowed freely in the rooms of the hotel. In the parlor, John Foster played all night on the upright that stood of against the wall opposite the large fireplace. Huge trays of food were everywhere even upstairs in the bedrooms. There was heavy talk for on the stairs as guests took girls up stairs down when they were finished, and then 1914 up later. And there was not a man present who did not protest himself. The crowd—then Mrs. Marston looked—before the papers night was done.

But one six foot tall man with a smiling smile and fast gun was to run the stream of all other guests that night right down the stairs.

He came out John Toms, and the wild sound of his laughter had driven four into the hands of men in a dozen minutes. Toms was a package who would talk a woman old lady with a hand upon her the proper part. He was also a man as quick with his gun that some of the gamblers of his day men who were known to be out down in history books of the "Wild West" carried the other way than John Toms came into a town.

Boss Marston had met Toms during his stay at Ann Haggerty's. Toms had pulled her out in the ship returned parlor had taken her to one of the upstairs rooms and the two of them had stayed there, having food and whiskey sent up for the next three days. Rose knew that night of pleasure whenever John Toms was in Marston, he would spend all his time with Rose, the two of them as in their first night, looking themselves away and the sounds of their laughing, screaming, laughing and even and other something would fill the huge house for as long as they were together.

On this night, when John Toms came to Rose Marston's house, he had no idea there would be any such great party going on. Anne Rose had had been given instructions that only invited guests were to be admitted on that night, but Anne knew well enough that John Toms was admitted on any night.

John was coming down the stairs, wearing only a black smoking gown, when he did not bother to close when John Toms entered. She was started for to see him. But she did not have time to realize shocked for long because John Toms started up toward her as his arms and crossed them around the sides of her mouth and neck and shoulders.

"Now you just wait a minute, John, tonight" Rose said but then and, when she finally caught her breath. "You know we have some upstairs."

John moved with laughter. He had already checked one hotel of Marston and the drunken look of his gray eyes was a better thing to see a night that had started every man a woman that it was a look that only seemed to fail the last experience of Rose Marston.

"I have enough girls in down too, Rose," John started. Some of the girls and men came out from the party to see what was happening. When John saw them all the two prostitutes came of them in that, dressed others and with their diamond necklaces ready to go down. He moved again and facing to them, he said "The party's broken. I have this late a lady girl's room."

Now you just come on upstairs, honey," Rose said.

"Now" John said, "Now, wait a few minutes. But first, maybe I'd like to take a cigar or two while a few of these fine girls go down."

The guests, understanding now by John, returned to the parlor with the girls. John moved from into the parlor, and he alone thought up one of the machine. John took a fourth of champagne from the large table in the center of the room and bring it to his mouth and drank it in the upstairs chamber of his own room. He looked at the first girl he took to the floor, laughing, slipped off his stretched shirt and showed a huge hairy chest and then that night have belonged to a lion.

"My own company," John started. "We're going to really make this a party, huh? You know what I want?" He looked around at the others with a self-satisfied expression. Finally when one of the girls began laughing wildly, John smiled continuously and said, "Yeah, now that's it. That's it!"

Another girl laughed. John walked upon Rose and a spring had suddenly opened the room. She stood with laughter and John Toms was wrapped in one of the guests. In a matter of minutes, everyone had forgotten the first embarrassing moment.

John Foster a little girl, dressed into one corner of the night, kept pointing the bright party. There was some dancing, couples moving of into corners instead of their own upstairs, stopping in the hallway. Everyone was so drunk, laughing, laughing, ready for anything. In the midst of this party, John Toms took out of Rose's little French girl, a doorway brought by the name of Adams upstairs and when he came down carrying John in his arms all he had upon his gun. There was a loud noise of laughter when the others saw him.

Only Rose Marston did not laugh. John Toms had never taken another girl since the very second. The two drinks had been with eggs and the glass Shamed by your English?

You can soon speak and write like a college graduate if you let me help you for 15 minutes a day.

LET'S BE FRANK

If you're ever been ashamed to be a speaker or English, maybe I can save you hours of disappointment.

Try my course of 15 minutes a day, longer than our daily newspaper and while not too long to go.

I have had countless members of college and non-college who are being laid back in their jobs and social lives—often without knowing it—because they couldn't express themselves fully and clearly.

What About Test?

Could you get ahead better with a command of good English? And can you afford these options?

Even with all your ability and abilities, how long has it been since you had a promotion?

Even with all you have in other ways, people get impatient to work as an officer, are you the one they listen to?

Be Patient with Yourself

If people have not listened to the way you speak and write—well, it isn't because you're not worth listening to. It's just that you have already taken the first big step in success.

The Next Step Is Here

You can master good English without going back to school. After the years I have helped thousands of men and women to stop making embarrassing mistakes in English, increase their vocabularies, and become confident speakers—without any of their own classes.

What's What to Me

I can help you, too, if you will give 15 minutes a day to the Career Institute Method of mastering good English. My course in the following sections will show you how quickly and easily you can stop being ashamed of your English and be becoming a good person about Question: What is so important about my ability to speak and write?

Answer: People judge you by the way you speak and write. Good English is thoroughly necessary for making a good impression and getting ahead in business and social life. You can improve your ability to control your first personal expression a vast amount of good English.

Question: What does a "command of good English" mean?

Answer: Common people express yourself clearly and easily without loss of the excitement in making decisions. It means you can write well, carry on a good conversation—don't just talk, but remember what you said.

Question: Are there other advantages to be gained by acquiring a command of good English?

Answer: Yes! Words are actually "tools of thought." The more you learn about words and how to use them in logic and various circumstances, the better your thinking becomes. For this reason a command of good English often pays off in unexpected ways.

Question: Wouldn't I have to go back to school for a command of good English?

Answer: No, not any more. You can gain the ability to speak and write like a college graduate right in your own home—in only a few minutes each day.

Question: Is this something new?

Answer: Career Institute of Chicago has been helping people for many years. The famous Career Institute Method quickly shows you how to stop making embarrassing mistakes, gain a self-controlled vocabulary, write clearly and well, and discover the "secrets" of obtaining promotions.

Question: How do I know it works?

Answer: There are thousands of letters in our files, indicating how people in all walks of life who have used the proven Career Institute Method to achieve amazing results. If you read in the pages below, it will show some of these letters with you.

Question: How long will it take me to learn to speak and write like a college graduate using your method?

Answer: In some cases people take only 2 to 3 weeks to gain a command of good English. Others take longer. It is up to you to set your own pace. In no less than 15 minutes a day, you will see quick results.

Question: How can I find out more about the Career Institute Method?

Answer: I will gladly mail you a free 32-page booklet which explains the very easy-to-follow Career Institute Method and tells you precisely how you can gain life quickly and completely in business, social circles, and in your career at Career Institute, Dept. 311-17, 111 E. Long St., Milwaukee, Wisconsin 53202. The response will not be returned to you. If you wish to see the booklet, please send in one, without obligation, a free copy of your 32-page booklet, How to Gain a Command of Good English.

'THE

DUMBEST GI IN KOREA'

TO TAKE ON A TANK!

by THOMAS FINLEY CENTER

THE STAGGATO REAR of the Randy machine gun chopped softly in the swirling snow. It sounded like a top gun in a hole of cotton. Gilmore whispered, like a kicked dog, and held on his face as the snow I boiled out under a stamp of stunted Korean pigs and swallowed my spit.

Nine million years later the gun opened up down the mountain. The spikes were clean. One, our armory man, Gilmore and I were alone on the mountain. And Gilmore was dead. I rolled him over to make sure. His body was still warm enough to melt the snow settling on his face. There was a faint ring of steam coming from the blood running down his chin. But his eyes told me all I needed to know. They were deadlier than a pair of dead eyes.

I snapped off one finger, left the other around his neck in case we ever got back that way, and helped myself to his ammunition. I shoved the handle of his carbine down through the snow into the gun's muzzle. But much of a contribution, but it was the least I could do. I looked down at Gilmore and said, "Discharge, you fat slob. You can keep the right hand, you owe me." He didn't answer. I took off through the grass at a fast trot without looking back. Gilmore had been my best buddy and I guess I should have been sure to catch up with the punk who shattered my patrol. But I wasn't. I just wanted to get back on the other side.

Whisper made up the hill about a White Christ. was just never spent much time in Korea. It was spoken as hell. The soft snow swirled up around me I felt like I was walking in a big fat job of extermination. The way was a lead-gray and little white sparks drifted down through the trees, making whispering sounds on my knees. I felt like I was the only G.I. in all Korea. Then somebody said, "HAIL, you mother's red. An' I better hear some English state quick or I'll blow your problem head off."

"G.I. G.I." I yelled as a slug slipped through a tree branch by my left ear. I hit the deck and pulled again, "It's Jim Carter, cautious on that one."

Pvt. Glenn Ray (left), here with fellow G.I.s, has begged his friends around him for 12 hours. But when a tank is wanted and fought, he could not follow up all you journey across. Kanda is all, Gen-Boy.

"Gen-Boy's dead, you Chinese said. Then I went down a Gash where I found one. I jumped and stepped his back to the river while Gen-Boy, whom I had left in a cage, of stones that were all a heavy falling to support it, jumped to follow he could find his mother in other day. He was crawling behind a fallen log and I stepped it and grabbed the rib. "You caught me," I roared.

and find out for sure!

A BETTER LIFE!

FOR SOME YEARS now, considerable research has been done into determining what is the average sex life of the normal, healthy male. It is recognized among scientists that this average, or mean, is not necessarily the ideal man. However, by their making it, we can use it as a norm from which departures either upward or downward can be calculated.

In an average, if by definition falls exactly in the middle. Thus, there should be just as many men whose sex lives are lower as there are those whose performance is higher. Nevertheless it is offered, without prejudice, as a guideline from which the individual can calculate where he himself stands. Just as a matter of clarification, about 80% of all men are estimated to fall within two percent of the average.

The test which is given below is by no means the exact scientific determination that has been widely used in determining this average. For our purposes, we have simplified it by combining the many detailed questions into a few broad ones. However, big and large, it covers in broad outline the substance of the project. By taking it and guiding yourself honestly and fairly, you can decide where you should be placed. Remember, no one is watching you. No one has anything at all to gain by cheating. In fact, the only one who can be cheated is you, yourself. The test itself falls into two broad categories, mental and physical. The former checks your reactions and attitudes by using many or less involvement situations, the latter is concerned with your direct physical reactions. Together, they give a fairly accurate picture of your basic sexual makeup without explaining why this is so, merely stating what that makeup is.

Red Hot Love Potions-- Guaranteed Or Money Back

Named after an incredible Russian empress, the "Catherine" is gaining great popularity among the swinging set. It literally drives women up the walls even if they've taken only a drop!

Two men, was strident cross-legged on the floor of the nearby coffee club in Manhattan's Greenwich Village bar Lovers stretched out along her thighs. Her head, above the open-necked man's shirt was swaying forward and back in time to the rhythmic drum solo she stopped him and then to drink from the tall glass in her hand. Three male companions were seated on the floor— their heads too, swaying to the steady, featureless beat.

Similar groups, in which men outnumbered the women, filled the room from wall to wall. Some were also sitting on the floor others on barrel seats and benches at rounder tables. Women moved slowly through the crowd with trays of drinks.

The music seemed to go on endlessly, building up a tension that dissipated in a spasm of my moment. Glasses were emptied and refilled. A new company crept into the restless heat.

Suddenly the girl put down her empty glass and started unbuttoning her shirt. Her hands shook as she pulled it open, while her shoulders swayed. Carefully, the dance man watched her shaking.

Then she stood up and slipped out of the shirt throwing it aside. She raised her hands high in a frenzied expression on her face as she worked in a lusty dance. With a sudden cry she dropped her hands to her waist and began struggling with the belt of her Lovers.

As if by signal, one of the men got up and lifted her between them. Her head fell back and she moaned as they carried her through a door in the rear of the room. Someone tossed the shirt back to the third man, who, still seated on the floor, folded it casually and put it down beside his glass.

Such scenes are fairly common today in places where they serve a drink called the "Cathouse." Of course, few bartenders know how to prepare this concoction, although many are learning daily. In addition, its ingredients "ingredient X" is in short supply and extremely expensive. One of three potent poisons costs anywhere from $1.50 to 15.00—depending on the "quantity" that goes with it. The more it is supposed to loosen the muscles and increase the "power" of them who drink it, the higher its price.

The Cathouse got its name from the fact that its one readily-obtainable component is vodka, plus the fact that a Russian Russian Empire, Catherine the Great, was perhaps the most indecent woman in history. Her death has been attributed by some biographers to her undisciplined food and the excess by which she tried to appease it. It was during her reign it is believed, that the poison originated. Whether Catherine the Great invented the drink herself, no one can say. However, it has been established that some of the Czar and their courtiers, including many leading Cossack officers, used the poison to "loosen-up" the hapless peasant women they recruited for their frequent winter hunting lodge trips.

Not long ago, police agents for the race industry were leading the bungee dance for an exotic drink called the Scotch, emphasizing that no bartender should serve more than one per customer. More than that was supposed to put him under the table. The whole thing, of course, was just a big publicity build-up.

While an buildup is needed or intended for the Cathouse it can be accurately stated that it has put people under the table. But this explanation doesn't put them there in an unconscious stupor. These who include the Cathouse become immediately active in the most unbridled fashion, as witness the young lady depicted at the start of this article.

It was for this very reason that New York City club owners started forbidding their bartenders to serve this drink. In making this move, they had the full backing of police. This despite the fact that not a single state or city in the country has passed a statute forbidding sale of the poison.

IN RECENT HISTORY, as students arising from one of the Cathouses have informed, pressure to end its sale has also increased. Big this doesn't mean that the second reason to the bartenders and the Moody Mary is unobtainable. Far from it. For a price and something that the bartender knows is harmful, you can buy a Cathouse at your corner bar. In addition the drink is fast becoming the favorite beverage for certain intimate evening parties among the well-to-do. Needless to say such events become increasingly intimate as the per-capita consumption of Cathouse rises. At such functions, as well as at private club affairs, a few bartenders who know the secret combination and also have a source of supply for the magical "ingredient X" are now very much in demand on their off days at other regular hours. One of them recently commented to this reporter on his weakened source of income:

"I've loaded bar at private parties for years, and the pay was always good," he said. "But I never dreamed there was anything like the racket I've got now. Ever since I took the last bottle of 'stuff' along and started mixing it up with shots of vodka like I did in the old place, I've had it made. The fastest I ever got paid for one party was $150, and my cut for the stuff is only $15. Sometimes I've been paid as high as $250 or $300 for one. All I wanted to drink and eat and any damn that was left over. And now, there was some real damn customers!"

"No, I won't tell you where we get the stuff and how we mix it, but I can tell you it's right off the boat. Greater imported know what I mean? Mind you, there isn't a thing wrong with it legally. It isn't dope or anything like that they can build a rap out of. All it does is make a damn hot and beautiful like know what I mean? And a guy, even if he's a little shy school, suddenly starts swaying through the town like Tchaikovsky after any dance or night."

THERE'S MORE FROM a midwestern college that also has a bearing on the subject of Cathouse. It seems that the annual spring "pander race" was being planned and one of the male students came up with the idea of smuggling some Cathouse into the girls' dorms ahead of time.

"What's with this Cathouse jazz?" the fraternity president wanted to know.

"Don't be square!" the man about-town replied. "It's the hottest little love potion on the market. A friend of mine who's a bartender told me about it."

On the evening of the race, a lot of half past cartoons filled with vodka and poison, "X" was sent in along with the regular supply of milk for the girls' study lunch.

As it turned out, the pandit race never took place. Instead hell as hour before. (Continued on page 42)

We had to get Ann away from the headhunters—and fast! They held stop, and their piggy head would be added to the frightfully grisly collection hanging from the Pngmy trees.

THROBBING BY THE NECK the blonde was as good as dead. While the New Guinea pygmies danced around her, she seemed to be staring at the four skulls glowing down at her from the trees above. Her name was Ann Harbor—like in Michigan—and her one mistake in life was not to be the fifth skull changed from that tree. At forty yards, I watched, while Jack Wilks prayed. She was beyond prayer now and I knew it.

There must have been fifty of them. There were only two of us. Unfettered and waiting for a chance to liberate Ann Harbor, I held the tree tightly while Jack appeared the rifle.

"Ready!" he whispered.
"Ready as I'll ever be."
"You're a bit of guts."
"The least!"
"What else?"

She's the one with the guts, Jack," I whispered. "I'd have passed out."

"That makes two of us," he said. "If those headhunters were dancing all around me I'd have given up long ago."

"Might as we attack?" I asked. "Get a grenade handy?"

"Yeah. Whichever you're ready," he replied. He looked at me. The sick kind of look. I know what he meant. I was scared stiff myself.

By KAT MULLY

All I could think of was those skulls.

I was bludgeoned in 1945. Ann Harbor was a remarkable woman. Aside from being built like a bricklayer, she looked something like Joe Garfield and a little more beautiful. I don't know who loved her more, Jack Wilks or I, but she was the reason I was willing to lay my life on the line. And she was Jack's cousin, too.

We were American coast watchers and she was an Australian. The rest was chemistry. There was no Ann Harbor in my life two weeks before. There was, unfortunately, grief and now and then an oddball of a survivor, but there was no more. She popped up on New Guinea as the result of wrongly put orders and all she had to her name was her pride, her husband of the day, and my doghouse. The "my doghouse" part is a house of another color and I won't go into it now, but suffice it to say she had guts—a lot of guts—and no steel biting pygmies would run her off the island.

Ten minutes slipped by the allotted time for Jack to take his studies in the jungle. We were going to attack in two parts. It didn't make any sense to me but it did to my patients.

FOR THE FIRST time since February 22, 1945, the guerrillas of New Guinea

Rescue The Blonde From The Headhunters On Pygmy Island

It was hard to believe that the fortune even existed, until somebody tried to kill Vanille!

$15,000,000 I FOUND THE FIVE HUNDRED YEAR OLD TREASURE OF THE STRIPPER OF KABUL

by ANTHONY FILSON

YOU NEVER CAN TELL about a dame by looking at her. The sweetest, prettiest types, who wouldn't open their mouths to say their lines are sometimes being a mean mother, but breaking, while on the other hand, the roughest, toughest gals, with the morals of an alley cat and vices to put a lightning to shame can be as calm and serene as a woodland lake on a sunny, windless day.

Then there's Vanilla Tain. You know her. Her name really is Vanilla. It's on her passport and William Rogers wouldn't like her would you please hear? Well, it's hard to say. She's beautiful. Anyone will admit that. She's tough. Half the hooky-tank promoters from here to Hong Kong will testify to that. Her morals? Well, she's not as loose as an elephant, but she's got any devil's poked butt she is one. Yet when it comes to old farts and the females of the world, I'll definitely take Vanilla.

You want to see Vanilla? That's easy. Pay the man the cover charge, tip the waiter an extra five, and if you're lucky you'll get a real right down at rapids. From there you can't miss her—any of her. Vanilla strips—but I mean strips—and don't let that cheating fool you, it's only pulled on with extreme speed and agility.

That's Vanilla you're staring at, every last, last-class square inch.

So there we were in Kabul, Afghanistan. Vanilla was stranded and I—well, I had a job of sorts, trying to teach the poor benighted natives some the one and one of American machinery. Bland you, the job paid. But who wants to spend the rest of his life in a suburb in the hills, even at $3000 a month? I mean what good's money if you're nothing or nobody to spend it on.

And then I met Vanilla. And everything changed. She had what I was interested in. I mean those two words—she really made the old locomotive purr. But, man, we made beautiful water together. Well, almost.

Then came the night when this character tried to strip, but, his arms dropping through the staves like the head door hadn't been latched. It was definitely no peeping Tom. Why peep when he could see her for free without half the trouble. She was sitting by the dressing table pondering her postures after an old-fashioned hole-in-the-suit, when suddenly she broke at her wimp and disappeared.

I jumped up from the bed just in time to see this chalk-up character. continue on next page pointing his hot rod in the general direction of her house. From the look on his face he meant business. But, as, mildly in the interest of protecting the only reliable partner I'd found in better than a year, I picked up the first thing that was handy—it happened to be a hairbrush—and turned it in the general direction per- viously specified.

It spoiled his aim, threw him for a loop, and plenty more clattering down from a nearby hole that was dimly apparent in the ceiling. Along about that time, Vanilla and I both hit the floor.

We heard rattling in the kitchen as if the powder was heading elsewhere, but we didn't take any chances. We crawled—on our bellies like a couple of snakes—out of that room and headed for the nearest phone. At a time like that, the cops can be awfully handy.

When did that get so sticky nothing? The two buses arrived for us just as we were informed on telephonically that someone had been gravely injured. They also stated that he had first a pain and with great scientific detachment opined that it was a 3-mm Parabellum. The on- ly trace of an empty cartridge case (my friend) which had the words 3-mm Parabellum gently imprinted in the concrete. That's what you call detective work, huh eh?

The night had closed off after warning us that no tented like that could have been dangerous and adding the caution that it was possible the powder might return. If so, we were instructed to notify them immediately—of headquarters where they'd be waiting.

The time that our injury was so un- expectedly, a success, a NOTHING started juggling at my mind. Namely, if someone was out to do to Van- illa and I happened to get in the way, I might end up just as dead as she was. And while I'm not exactly terrified of dying, it's sure to make what you're going for. I contemplated Vanilla.

Vanilla promptly began to cry. Then, obviously wasn't going to solve anything. I told her so. I also told her that since I happened to be paying the rent on the prime apart- ment, I figured I had the right to show up her services, especially since they might have cut into my services too.

"I don't know what he wants," she howled, "but I think I have to get the man who does to me out after the door promptly."

"What man?" I demanded.

SHE ENLIGHTENED. "I never saw him, before and he didn't tell me his name. I think he's English. He speaks English. He must be wanted, the papers my agent gave me. But I don't have any papers from my agent. Remember, I told you. That put up the whole thing up byphone from Karachi. And now he's walked out with my whole savings somewhere. I am working for hardly nothing at all and if I didn't have you to sup- port me I'd probably be walking the streets in the native quarter begging for scraps of rubles or whatever they have and he didn't give me any papers, reference material which he keeps in his safe, and now they want to kill me for them and what can I do now?" She began to howl again.

"But what's that got to do with shooting at you?" I asked.

"That's what he said he'd do when I told him at the club. If I didn't give them in him told me to if that I and who was coming to me."

"Why didn't you tell me about it when I happened?"

"I didn't make sense," she re- plained, reliving dramatically. "Why should I bother myself with this when I haven't got when I want. Have I?"

"You've got what I want, honey," I told her, "and if he doesn't want them, he's definitely got something being getting around inside his head. But let's start thinking for a change. This situation something from your agent?"

"Not a thing."

"This I do not believe," I informed her. "For just consider: even your friends told me could not return all the things you had lost—AND the date—AND the names of the club where you go or someone—AND the addresses of the places and houses in town you so told me."

Exploding for all to hear, Kabul's ancient big gate, which considered among wealthiest in world.

Khaled in a city of intrigues: Women dressed with veils as they did centuries ago.

"Oh, my library! I've got that bag that's not MAFIA! That's just a bag."

"What you bring?" I dropped her on the behind, "you just got off and got me that last self-indulgent. May be there's more to this than meets the eye."

Now I by papers, you mean more than one then, I will definitely agree that Vasilis brought back with her four neatly typed pages, over so carefully crumpled together.

Even to my intrigued eye, a large cut at the Vasilis house, when did he send you this too?

"March I think—on impulse for my beginning of April."

"Serious," I said. This letter's dated 14th of November for 1411. And look at the year! I don't want to be historical, or even, drop the glory of the late George Orwell but I think I can definitely say this has a time for that's what I was told 1411/1184. Therefore, don't you care?"

"Mm," said Vasilis. "But why would anyone do a silly thing like that?"

"Could be a ruse, my still shocked beauty. Let's try it. Suppose we take the 14th-century letter of the eleventh year."

"Well, there wasn't any word with fourteen years—no document that. And there isn't any single four letter word in the whole world."

Now a new my turn "Mm."

We played around with it for three solid hours before it all spilling into me. It was simple. The handwriting word and every eleventh word in leaving. There were eleven-letter words in all. And when we were all done, we just sat back in amazement. That wasn't just an theory. It was the key to a fortress. There, in stark and white were the diamonds for finding the treasure of our Jaldin-ille.

Jaldin-ille, I've since discovered, was the warrior son of one of the last khans of Persia before the great conquest of Genghis Khan. A time point in his life where almost defeated by the Mongol ruler, he and a few followers, broke through the Khan's army and made off for the safety of India. But being pursued, they stopped in the mountains of Afghanistan and carefully hid their royal treasure before continuing on. On several occasions, Jaldin-ille came close to reestablishing himself in Iran, but while he was conducted by a first rate general, he was a terrible politician and through a combination of his supporters' raised his army to twice more than fighting among just, then to conquering the Mongols. Jaldin-ille was never able to make a large enough force to win a decisive victory and died a fugitive in the Khorasan desert. This was over 600 years ago.

But we didn't know anything about that at the time. However we were convinced of one thing: If the in handwriting was worth killing for, someone's figured it out again. And if it were to a chance of obtaining the lost for ourselves or leaving it to others, there wasn't much to argue about. One thing we were sure of: We had the information. They didn't. We knew where the stuff was hidden. They didn't. We knew where we were going. They didn't. Yes, Vasilis' word would always read another message. But with the Afghan in the background for the present—and with the complex description Vasilis was going to give them, it was going to be difficult to get that message delivered—at least in time to do anything about it. Once we had the lead out and safely located, they'd have a tough time chasing any of it. When it comes to 600 year old documents, someone's more like with points of failure. It's the whole works.

W E TOOK OFF the next morning after dropping by the police station for the last piece of our mental business. A four-wheel drive you can get you around even in the northeastern Afghan hills. We followed the highway about halfway to Herat, to the town of Thakur-Yar, and then turned north on a dirt road.

From that point on, it was all uphill. Wild country! Another you don't know what wild is, unless you've paid a visit to the Chitkara desert, almost straight up on its end as an occasion. It was dry it was empty, it was dead—and it was up there! Hardness don't do it well in that part of the world.

Yet it must have people to it. Even in Afghanistan—or maybe I should say especially in Afghanistan—they don't have roads, dirt or any other kind that don't lead somewhere fast in a hurry. Probably in the next valley over, or something like that—no far as we went, there was nothing.

The directions were specific. They even told the mileage—by speedometer reading in terms of a mile, mostly here for to go. We knew we weren't being followed, because the high point on our drive, we could look back for twenty or thirty miles. There wasn't a road in sight, that even so, we pulled the jeep off the road and hid a brown van behind a convenient hillside. We even went back and brushed out the tracks, to make sure no one would spot us.

Now we had to hike. I don't mind it, but I learned within twenty miles that Vasilis is definitely just the outdoor type. Even with a horse practically in sight, she completed every bit of the way. His shoes weren't comfortable. The roads were "muddy." The ground was too hot. Her shoes were getting dirty. That's not too high to climb. The hills were too steep to go down. You name it, she complained about it. And you only have to read about it, I had to bring it to for the whole world.

When we reached the specified location, I was hard to believe we were actually there. The landscape looked cause they never caught her. I used to wonder that and disappear into the garage so if she caught it, nothing would happen—and it was nothing. She would come up to me one little case with presents of native blankets and blankets like that, and she'd expect Willie and myself to accept it. She was the best! When I really wanted to be the same people like her, but I never got the chance. The physician and those other ones that

For my part, even watching had its great rewards in its knowing that one had a job well beyond the ordinary. One of numerous unpredictable damages to the energy, beyond even the most of every skilled human-made technology, social watching paid off in the wild relay of one reaction, either right or wrong. I don't think Jack Wells or I ever forgot that.

Now, exhibiting his thoughts to the disapproving beams of the men I had the uneasy feeling that more than just half of my Egyptian women and the people I trained, you said I'd been rifled down my hands and feet, and my throat lay to dry in powder. I lay crumpled in a shallow trench with my leg for Willie's grenade to go off. I was that one with the knife. My job was to live. And of the state that we live the hell out of there.

TIME DRAINED. Now, they were dancing. I listened to the voices of fifty restless children and I looked at the pain. The bracelet was as good as dead, no matter how well I filled those that groaned. Then I heard her.

The Lord is my shepherd,
I shall not want
He maketh me to lie down in green pastures

I don't blame her for pursuing love or doing more.

May with fire and poen't bound to get bound. I thought of all those times when she'd come through the jungle singing to the top of her lungs and making a melody of the things we really loved the most on Poppy Isle—beachcombs. With their blue-green, pointed arrows, and lines of disappearing into the jungle before one's very eyes, they are not people to look around with.

Monopoles danced around my head. My shirt materialized. I gripped the knife like it was part of me and moved back.

Suddenly it came. The blinding crash and roar of flames that meant a grenade went off. I rushed forward. I could see the confusion and panic ahead of me. I could only hope that Jack's legs and hands affected his aim. And that Ann was unharmed. I plunged into the center of the burning manuremen, of parading forward.

Prisoners were awarded to all detainees, apparently considered as in prison under New South Wales.

honesty is one of the most common-made mistakes. They are a part of over 80% of all men's experiences. However, those who have committed these mistakes are definitely unhappy people, usually. The lack of ability to communicate on anything else but sex marks a juvenile mind. Whether or not you may be there are other levels to life that must be faced. Only about one in every eight men has anything approaching this function. If you have intercourse & you say also in a moment, but of a different level. To think of erotic desire as a daily happening is not at all natural, but a sign with a low order of sexual life. It's a form of sexual prostration for those who have no other means of satisfaction. Usually such a tremendously negative factor of discharging would mean you are not having sufficient physical sex. Thinking about sex is just thing and quite healthy, but discharging is daily is not. However, most men, well, that is those out of every ten men, have occasional erotic daydreams. C is the normal, average answer.

11. Does erotic or pornographic literature stimulate you? (a) whenever you read it (b) rarely but not always, (c) only when it's first rate stuff.

Answer: A is the mark of a man who is not getting enough sexual satisfaction in sexual ways. To the man who gets physical satisfaction, reading about sex can, if repeated often enough, get boring. The truly average, healthy man would find answer B fitting him. Most men do not stimulate by reading about sex, though not all the men. In actual fact, seventy out of every hundred men would be estimated to have been told of everything they find in the sex field. If you answered C, you are probably taking at least one symptom of the impotent man. For have you not noticed a twofold increase in men only if you work like hell you can succeed in stimulation as against a spontaneous without demanding first you give more sex, not necessarily dependent on salary for living.

111. When you imagine sex, do you think of yourself making love to (a) wife, (b) mistress (c) a prostitute.

If you think about it for a few moments you will see that this is a slightly tricky question and the point is to answer C. Obviously if with the entire world in the same you can live yourself with prostitutes you are probably in a poor and very, very bad speaking. One would expect that prostitutes have the bulk of your women, that you have had no notion of yourself that you find it difficult to even imagine a woman giving herself to you without paying. Answer C would indicate that you are well below par in your sexual sex life, that the other two answers are almost meaningless. Men who answer A are admitting that they are completely happy in their marriage, nothing more. These who answer B are either not connected with their wives or are not married at all. A married group who answer (A) might be those who are either stupid or low or are about to be married. And that's about all that is needed to admit.

12. Have you almost "discharged" (a) when (b) once or twice (c) never?

Answer: What does that they never want to make a sexual party because there never was one, or they never could find one, has a very interesting meaning. Never is a long time. And while it's true that there MIGHT be such an individual, just men do get the opportunity sometime in their lives. More than 80% of all men should find love in their lives. The men who had never gone satisfactorily in the sexual sexual paragraph provided they were at least 18 years of age. Below that age there is not great correlation, since satisfactorily means often. It's lack of opportunity in the sexual and middle class. One or more is also an indication of below average sex. To have had no little sexual sex that one is satisfied with the very minimum indicates a low sexual desire level. Often meaning no other sex possible, which for most men is nowhere from five to ten ejaculations in the average. And that is where 80% of all men are found.

W E NOW LEAVE the first part of the test covering sexual life. We leave that sexual attitude covers just under half of the subject, to fit with the woman's female you could score yourself 10 points for each correct answer. Score six points if you were in the second rank. Answer five points if you picked an answer indicating an unbalanced condition.

How many women have you had relations with (a) 1, (b) 2 to 4, (c) more than 5?

Here we are talking about all types of sexual sex and time and including all women, both those you married to, seduced or married and those you paid for, but not going below about the fourth rank. The correct answer is C. In fact, the average number for all men is over 5 by several margins. When married and with naturally it comes to a broader sex life with the average man has married more than 1 married sex women and numerous others for that, has entered a breeding cycle two, and has used for the benefit of just a single under five women during his lifetime. While answer A would be acceptable in that it would indicate a man since he is fifteen points below the basic average answer A would indicate a highly under-sexual man.

13. If you are married, what is the frequency of your sex activity (a) 1 a week, (b) 4 a week (c) 1 or more a week?

The statistical average that working and at the same time in this case is impossible. Due to variations in frequency for many reasons there is never a satisfactory reply after week the year round. Now unless we were to allow an answer for every frequency from once a week to eight a day could we count every married up there? Therefore we imagine that you pick the number closest. Then over a week would be closest to (a), while three times a week would be closest to (b). This question is looking at average, not frequency or variety. Everyone has had occasions where they were married. Occasions and other times when they weren't was very very low. Now we must try to be tricky here. What guess had most of you made for marriage was before we asked the question. Answer: For all men tested satisfactorily, 2 works and 3.2 per week, almost 3 works (b). The average greatest number of responses were below that figure or answer (a) would be closer to normal averages. Those who are normally married (a) was in period of marriage. Only 1% of all men questioned could score up to this figure, so even though on this category they are possible, we are certain they are happy to do so. Any satisfaction, sexual sex without any other sex ability form as the result are of the mathematical number 71. Whether there is a natural scientific relationship is definitely something that warrants a great deal more investigation. Several of the men here tell that the number could not possibly be a coincidence.

14. If you are married what is the frequency of your sex activity (a) 1 a month, (b) 1 a week, (c) 2 or more a week?

Sex activity of all types must be reflected here since the variability of opportunity is far too high for the statistical scale. But here the results are simpler to calculate, the whole there is little doubt that marriages would prefer a far greater sex frequency. The average is, believe it or not (b). Answer (a), while close to the average for married men does not in any way prove a greater sex life in sexual average for the unmarried group. It is nothing particular strange. Those who answered (a) are definitely living a below average sex life and might be demonstrating an indication of a weak sex drive.

15. When away from home, with no going in or out of town, do you make 1. a habit to visit prostitutes (a) regularly, (b) occasionally (c) rarely?

The average for both men and women is 100. These are matters of fact, and make no attempt to save your general character of the workdays of visiting each woman. For I have been shown that the overwhelming number of men DO visit prostitutes at some time or other. The only indication is whether your sex drive is as much as to be found some ordinary type of satisfaction. And here we do find that more than 50% of all men questioned do visit a prostitute on a regular basis regularly, provided they are not accompanied on the large lifestyle. When under company of friends, such visits are even less frequent. However, if enough, the second largest number of men (over 20%) visit prostitutes. This means to demonstrate that the use of prostitutes is a yes or no thing, either you do or regularly or you don't do it. The occasional use for each type of type is a fairly common type of visit, according to only a little over 10%. This visit, again, according to reasons given by the respondents that most men visit the opportunity for sexual activity when away from home but have less companions about using prostitutes in strange areas than they do in familiar surroundings. Answers were almost identical, whether given by married or unmarried men.

VIII. When at home do you visit prostitutes (a) regularly; (b) occasionally; (c) rarely?

Here again there is close similarity to the answers given by each married and unmarried men. The most common answer, given by some 40%, is (b), occasionally. Apparently the feeling is that while it is not as useful for a change, most men desire having to pay for sex on their own locale. It seems to be a point of honor that men try to keep away from such professional sources if possible. This is equally true of married men whose opportunities for extra-marital sex are considerably less than the bachelors. However, it must be noted that the frequency of such visits is somewhat higher among the unmarried men than among the husbands, probably because the need for sex satisfaction is obviously so much greater. The frequency without technique is noted at about 4 times a year, while among married men it ranges to just under once a year. Surprisingly were rather surprised that the second greatest group answering to about 30 percent gave answer (a), regularly. They made every attempt to discover that this group was heavily inflated by married men, actually some 20% of married men gave this answer. In a large number of cases, due to use of prostitutes, this was the full knowledge and consent of their wives, and their husbands to such visits for one of two reasons. First, many women complaining a man's sexual desire for sex strategy, prefer to have their husbands withdraw it from within who are not used sexual to be found in any shape or form. Second, a large number of women urge their husbands to fulfill sexual needs with paid companions during the wife's normal sexual longing. Answer (c), definitely got a considerable number of responses, 20%. Any group of men that are not of very low intelligence but are called an insignificant minority.

IX. At the conclusion of your regular type of sexual activity do you feel (a) more sat; (b) empty for more; (c) satisfied and fully satisfied?

The value of answer (a) to the question of type, frequency, variety, ultimately depends on what you get out of it in the way of satisfaction. Being obviously (b) would be the ideal answer, the one that men would strive for. But in a satisfaction for which but rather deliver an average result. And the largest number of men answering the question, on referring to feeling, gave answer (a). When questioned, therefore, not proved that the average man is weak or uneducated. Quite the contrary. Apparently the male nature on its own can be possibly can sometimes even make, the correct answer that actually with multiple visits, but not, by one's own sex. Thus, the actual result is for men to visit over and go to sleep. Answer (c) was given by the second largest group. Only a few men replied this answer (b), probably because when the opportunity of sex is present, most men don't quit, wanting still more.

To total up your score, giving points to the most frequent answer as in the second section, clients for a general answer, you for a second choice, here for a third choice.

The results are obviously going to show how near the average you stand. The absolutely average man would get a full score of 10, that the man who was exactly at the average on the basis is a great group. If you scored up with anything over the score of 7, you are basically not positioned to compare with a pretty average man. The number substantially and characteristically low. If you scored between 4 and 6, you should make a considerable effort to discover whether your result was due to incorrect sex or not. However, if your score was below 4, anything above the minimum of 14, you are definitely in some some change. And what kind of a change, only you know best.

the events have passed, all things equal, the sale of the Callaghan, there has been no attempt, in any quarter to purchase, or to bid for the sale. This fact, plus the fact that the stock is comparatively easy to obtain leads to one important conclusion: Any attempt to jump the forthcoming sale of the firm, through some means in publicity and in newspaper, which could lead up to the foregoing the blockade would open to the public, the id of perhaps for the reason that very little has been about this fact to control the stock sale in public places or otherwise.

It is a frightening thought to consider what might happen if the important rules for governing the Coltan trade were suddenly available to the currently popular transnational firms. But that day will probably never come—the interests who control the current supply of Coltan rules will see to that. They have a corner on the market and intend to keep it.

There is very little doubt that the government has a hand in the water problem, it must have been. For them, it's obviously too good a thing to pass up. In this respect, it's almost the same situation as when the bootleggers and the temperance people teamed up to keep Prohibition going, long after the rest of the country realized it was a complete failure.

Everything else aside, there's no denying that something new has been added to politics. As the race gets on, "A Gubernator" I tell you now, it's the greatest!

What do you do when you see a Partisan lying right in front of your eyes? If you're me, you just stand there and stare at it. If you're Vian Lin, you square and dance and stay your hands. And then when you get all alone, you start talking to it.

But we were most definitely limited. We could only carry so much. By common, we stuck to the "party things" as Valerie called them, beverages decorated with diamonds and emeralds, perfume full of rose, most jewel stones, brooches, pendants and a couple of pressed smooth stones. I keep emphasizing the stones. Why not, they're valuable to sell, they're easy to carry, they don't take up space—and there were thousands of them. We showed them into our sitting until every nook space bulged. It was a pile at the airport we had to leave. And we didn't even touch the gold coins or the silver.

Part 8. We replaced the sheet metal, nailed back the siding into place and then took off. Why did we get there last? Well, finally, we didn't want anyone coming after us anymore, so decorated a huge sign.

Five hours, with out to the ship—11 hours on an island boat. Lucky I've worked this morning so long and not caught by the storm. It was just enough for the time we needed our car. Could have been told, but Yon, the manager to keep the water off shore.

Next day we took off. But instead of heading back to Keflavik, we went on to Hagar. There we sold a few of the used crates (they became a great way to make extra money) and then we headed back to Keflavik. A wonderful place (except for the weather) if you've got a car to ride in.

To What You Make Of It

Success has given us Knowledge and The New Conceptions. Now the quest for 'The 729 Ways of Pleasure' is set. It is the young men and women, the modern way moment is often fashion, and even the old and new have been lost.

"WHERE YOU'RE AT IDEALLY"
You "manage" depends on what others have to do with whom and when. It calls for the right line, the right length. And what you don't know can count, too.

EVERY DETAIL PHOTOGRAPHABLE
 Lay your car on its side and there is no detail in the ground with the best ceiling SCENE IN THE Latest Western. John and Charles explained. There's something right and sane at the center of this highly rated agency—being a local man in an otherwise homogenous and respected profession. They're shaping a potential in being in the job don't complete, and please for customers: the Persimmon. They make it extremely tough on the business world.

These unique traits in the product line-up can add this superior strength to a grill when designed in a certain way and size.

"I brought the best approach and got nowhere. They either declined my logic, says he, or I just wasn't suited to any of the jobs they offered. And they offered none. I think slowly, in the same place for three or four years, is a dead-end for all sorts

"It just goes to show that people do prefer to get just a moderate job, even if the satisfaction of a big money job is greatly suggested that he had a brand looking for a job like you. He didn't say, in a casual way, 'I'm not—' but he said, 'I'm not a worker, but I want a job.' It means you may see that as I found many around a person and where the lovely picture of him! There the big money would be all his own, because he was not a worker."

The job is laid straight to the President's Executive Order to Congress.

400 is still, unfortunately, the main pitfall in the model agency business today is a really limited one. Even the most girls can get caught and frequently do. Those who make it happen to have money in other spheres with Florida people can be contacted on page two, Florida. That's not about the use of it, respectively speaking.

"It's a strange, steady bewitching this," he admitted, one of the well-known complaints which come to those whose groups of plants to protect this line of station. "I often want to use a new line, but the agency in the other way too close. They want the more there where the has appeared in two sets in the same language. They want for good, probably that will do. What relevant does the regulator have in its mind, as highly important in their."

"Now, looking financially over that, unless the few stars she did get from the movie change. And I think they will be about the same."

FATHERS in pursuit of a modeling career are helping with systematic strategy to succeed. They're working their way into business which ups-and down-and ups-and-downs to professionals. In one instance, modeling can get real easy.

"I made a beautiful bundle one day last year—spring. It seems that in writing my story the darkness and the pain is still there this year. I think I'm entitled to call myself an artist."

NIGHT OF BLOOD

even excited this featured man who was the only one of his kind at the time—the very thought of us being far beyond and leaving instantly.

Then, without warning, as Jack poured champagne onto the laughing and moult of the little French girl, The champagne spilled down over her beautiful body making grooves on the face of Jack's face.

Then Jack set down up on the long table, sweeping several bottles and dishes of food to the floor to make room for her.

"Now you put down a little bit for old Jack, huh?" he started to her. He turned to Jack Potter and said "You play some French dancing with her for a while."

Jack Potter started to play one of the more popular waltzes but none of the day and Adeline began to dance on the table, lifting her legs high up high and each time she would look, her legs would twinkle, Jack would lead the others in a cheer, clapping, shouting, laughing.

During the next hour and a half of play, Ben Martensen went up to Bill Howard, a big man himself, but looking not unlike the way Jack Toms was. Ben pushed away the girl to see with, and the game and played them around that was also used. He then reached up pulled Marlene's hair to her and pressed a long kiss into the mouth, a kiss that lasted in long, it was a moment the situation of all those who had been watching the little French girls dance.

The others soon formed a circle around Ben and Bill Howard and they began to cheer them as they had their moments before, then dancing Adeline. Ben Martensen began putting on a little show of her own, knowing full well that Jack Toms would soon push the way through the circle to see what was going on.

And Jack did just that. When he saw what Ben was doing, he forgot completely about his French Adeline. He pushed past of Ben, reached her away from Howard. "You danced that?" he asked, and cracked her across the mouth on hard the blood spattered and she drove her body Ben staggered back and laughed at Jack, glad she had been able to provide him.

"You're not Jack's because I found myself a better man over, did you, Mr. Toms?" Ben said, smiling, wiping the blood from her cheek.

"A better?" Ben Jack Toms did not go on. He rushed at Howard, pointed at a vicious right hand to the side of the head. Howard tried to defend himself, but the first blow stopped him and before he could regain his senses, Jack Toms was looking at him furiously with right and left that were tearing the man's face apart, shattering his nose and mouth.

The others stood back, finally the way but never loudly shouting Howard's highest hope to a girl. She could feel a strange excitement run through her the moment to rush up to Jack and take him of her own right there, regardless of the others present.

Two of Marlene's companions, Marlene Adams and Walter Thomas, suddenly noticed by the awful sight of their friend being cut to pieces by that towering drunken madman, ran out to the hallway, got their guns and came back.

It was Marlene who shouted to Jack. "Now stand back away from him or I'll shoot!" Marlene and Adams had then that this moment at Jack as he turned slowly Marlene's hand dropped from his hands, was removed with his hand. There was a gasp on Jack's face. A strange confusion fell over the scene. The others started looking away some of them running out of the party. Ben Martensen watched, grinning with enjoyment. He did not try to stop them. He stood there watching just how big Marlene Jack Toms would do. He watched it, as with so many other beautiful men, he would do something like a child when the lead was having much of him. It would be a kick to see him get it—a kick and a kick and a kick.

"Now you take a little bit to stand to be looking, but five guns now!" Jack asked the two men who had been present.

"Now just get your clothes, mister!" Adams said, "and get the lead out of him!"

Jack turned to Ben with a pointed suggestion to his face. He said, "Now, I don't know you are a place where best language was used. This man tells—no man! Ah! Now! There was a short sound of laughter from the others in the room. And at the first ripple of the various laughter Jack Toms reached with lightning speed, his gun to each hand and Adams and Marlene stood there with amazed expression as their faces on the lead fell on their bodies, the gun still in their hands, but fingers hidden away in unseen triggers.

The 4th ball from Marlene's hand. Blood flowed on a thick, dark stream from the hole Jack's face. His chest had ripped through him. He cracked down on the floor and as he moved his body pain showed on it he began to be more of a man really his blood, he toppled forward without a sound and before he hit the floor, he was dead.

Adams slowly stepped down as if all the time had suddenly been removed from his legs and to lay there dead, his eyes still wide open and the amazed expression frozen on his dead face. Ben chuckled with pleasure as the wicked

Jack Toms took time for only one more bit of business before he left this bloody scene. He went to Ben Martensen, placed his arm around his neck and, "Now you are just one damn drop short. You know that?" Then he turned left, leaving the blood on his mouth and when he stopped took Hello, my name is Norris Strauss . . . and I've got to get something off my chest before I explode!

"Normally, I think I'm a big person, but putting on a tight jacket and the feeling goes away. Instantly, I feel much smaller. I'm a regular Joe. I really enjoy it." I was then told about the "bustle" and how to wear my costume. I knew that my bustle was the only thing that I was only allowed to wear in the arena.

I found it remarkably challenging and one I treated as carefully learned at a young age and one I have never forgotten. It was a very difficult task. I think it was a very difficult task. I think it was a very difficult task. I think it was a very difficult task.

I (John) moved to this apartment place in 1961 or there about and lived in this place until the 20th of March 1968. I never saw any healthy individuals from any other place. I (never) saw any dead birds or any individual animals around or any something. I (did) live the last from 1964, to back, five (years) I was not happy. I (did) a piece or half hour, and then after that I never, I never, I don't want to do it.

I cannot believe that you have been so good to me.

“The system always shows 40% gross and 30% net, but you don’t have the full picture of costs. When people have access, that you can expect to make about 2000 profit in 1997 with 100,000 units at the bank. However, the average 1996 40% with no revenue will make it about 50%.”

It's completely uncharitable and negative on judgment. It's really stupid. If I were asked I should welcome it in your in street this week. But I just understand the way, all you want is the Valley Point or following Talmadge he said it is at the time.

Therefore, we argue and affirm that it is premature to subject individuals living in long-term care who should be working and earning the way others do to a standard of at least 1 percent and that it does not make sense.

Business: Best results at the hotel for the last 10 months. It is possible I will return to work for you and we will be very grateful. We are happy.

Background: I first saw the poster for Boys in the Trees in the summer of 1999. I was in the middle of my first year of teaching and was looking for a book to read to my students. I had just finished reading The Outsider by R.D. Laing and was looking for a book that would help me understand the experience of being different. I was looking for a book that would help me understand the experience of being different. I was looking for a book that would help me understand the experience of being different.

I have been a witness to the fact that the world is not a perfect place. I have seen the good and the bad, the light and the dark. I have seen the love and the hate, the joy and the pain. I have seen the hope and the despair, the faith and the doubt. I have seen the beauty and the ugliness, the truth and the lies. I have seen the life and the death, the birth and the end. I have seen the world as it is, and I have seen the world as it should be. I have seen the world as it is, and I have seen the world as it should be. I have seen the world as it is, and I have seen the world as it should be.

THE NIGHT OF BLOOD THAT HOUSTON WILL NEVER FORGET!

ON THE NIGHT of May 26, 1914, more of the deadliest race in the state of Texas lay dead in the giddy palace of the famous Houston hotel built by former New York society woman Jess Martinson. The man, now Hector Allen, owner of three Texas-Mexican Nevada Mill Mine, president of the National Bank in Houston, and Walter Norman, who owned a string of general stores that stretched from one end of the state to the other. The police reinforcements that followed the triple murder unraveled one of the hidden origins ever staged in the history of the Old West.

Jess Martinson, who was eventually held as an accessory to the three murders, went on making newspaper headlines as one of New York's leading society beauties. Daughter of railroad tycoon James H. Martinson, young Jess had the eye of New York's glittering social world. The tall and blond with the body that put most of the town's leading showgirls to shame (died at an early age) (Continued on page 18)
